Generation No. 1

1. John¹ Lanier was born in Rouen, France, and died 1572 in London, England.

Child of John Lanier is:

- + 2 i. Nicholas² Lanier, born 1542 in Rouen, France; died January 31, 1609/10 in Rochester, East Greenwich, Kent, England.

Generation No. 2

2. Nicholas² Lanier (John¹)¹ was born 1542 in Rouen, France, and died January 31, 1609/10 in Rochester, East Greenwich, Kent, England. He married Lucretia Bassano 1566 in All Hallows Barking Parish, England, daughter of Anthony Bassano and Elena de Nazzi. She was born Bef. 1560 in London, England, and died January 04, 1632/33 in East Greenwich, Kent, England.

Notes for Nicholas Lanier:

Nicholas played the flute and the cornet. He was master flutist to Henri II of France. During the Protestant persecutions, he was a Hugunot and migrated to England with safe passage arranged for him by his patroness, the widowed Queen Catherine de Medici. Nicholas arrived at the new court of Elizabeth I in 1561. Married to Lucreese Bassano by order of the Queen, and appointed Mast of the Flutes by Elizabeth, the couple flourished, acquiring a great deal of property in East Greenwich, Blackheath and nearby. Three generation of this remarkable family served the British Monarchy as court muscians, poets, and artists. Their efforts are well documented and were well rewarded.

The will of Nicholas Lanier, Gent. was proved July 1612, leaving lands and goods to wife Lucreece; to sons John, Alphonse, Innocent, Jerome, Clement, 12 shillings; to Andrea 20 pounds if he does not have my place; four daughters, three of whom are unmarried, I leave to the discretion of my wife Lucreece.

Children of Nicholas Lanier and Lucretia Bassano are:

- + 3 i. John³ Lanier, born 1565; died Unknown.
- 4 ii. Alphonse Lanier, born 1567; died Unknown. He married Emila Bassano October 1592; born 1570; died 1654.

Notes for Emila Bassano:

Emilia Bassano Lanier (1570-1654) was the mistress of theatrical patron Henry Carey, Lord Hunsdon, Shakespeare's company patron. Emilia Bassano was the illegitimate daughter of a Jewish Italian musician from Venice named Baptista Bassano, and was a courtesan at the court of Queen Elizabeth. She had become the mistress of Henry Carey, Lord Hunsdon, when she was in her teens. In 1593 she became pregnant and was given some money and married to Alphonse Lanier, another court musician. The next year Hunsdon became the patron of Shakespeare's theatrical company, and it is possible that Emilia Lanier might have known Shakespeare through this connection. She might also have known the playwright through her husband's place in the world of court entertainment. The possibility that she was Shakespeare's Dark Lady rests chiefly on these connections, plus a description of her—by the astrologer, Simon Forman, with whom she may have had an affair as a witch-like 'incuba', a characterization thought to accord well with the poet's 'female evil [who can] corrupt [a] saint to be a devil' (Sonnet 144.5-7). Given that her father and son were musicians its often thought that she herself was well versed with music. Sonnet 128 refers tellingly to Shakespeare or the sonnet speaker watching longingly as his beloved plays the keys of an early piano "the virginals".

Aemilia Lanyer was christened at St. Botolph, Bishopsgate--the London neighborhood where "foreign musicians and theatre-folk lived"--on January 27, 1569 (Rowse 13). She was the daughter of Baptista Bassano and Margaret Johnson. Nothing certain is known of Lanyer's mother but that she was buried in Bishopsgate on July 7, 1587 (Rowse 14). But it is possible that she was the Margaret Johnson born ca. 1545-1550 who was the aunt of Robert Johnson (1583?-1633), lutenist and composer, musician of Shakespeare's company, and, later, musician to the court of Charles I (DNB s.v. "Robert Johnson"; Woods, Lanyer, 3-4). Lanyer's father's family, the Bassanos, were court musicians who had come to England from Venice at the end of Henry VIII's reign. It has been argued that they were converted Jews (Lasocki and Prior; Rowse, "Revealed at Last," and ensuing correspondence; Greer et al., s.v. "Aemilia Lanyer"), but Ruffatti has argued persuasively that the family was Christian. Lanyer had an elder sister, Angela (d. 1584), and two brothers, Lewes and Phillip, who did not survive to adulthood (Lasocki and Prior 46). Lanyer's father died when she was seven and was also buried in Bishopsgate, on May 11, 1576 (Rowse 14). Internal evidence of Lanyer's poems tell us that she was fostered in the household of Susan Bertie Wingfield, Countess Dowager of Kent (information also confirmed by Forman), and that she was later attached to the household of Margaret, Countess of Cumberland, and her daughter, Anne Clifford. Lanyer memorializes her time with them at the estate of Cookham Dean in "The Description of Cooke-ham." Lanyer must have been educated along with the noble girls whom she attended, for her work shows familiarity with poetic genres and verse forms and with the (Geneva) Bible (McBride, Engendering Authority, "Appendix").

As a young woman, Lanyer frequented the court of Elizabeth I and was mistress to Henry Carey, Lord Hunsdon, forty-five years her senior, who "maintained [her] in great pomp," says Forman, and provided her with an income of forty pounds a year (Rowse 11). (There is no conclusive evidence that Lanyer was William Shakespeare's mistress, an argument advanced by Rowse, nor, indeed, that she was the "dark-eyed lady" of Milton's sonnets, a theory advanced early in this century by John Smart.) She became pregnant at the age of twenty-three, was paid off by Hunsdon, and married her cousin by marriage, Alphonso Lanyer, a Queen's musician, on October 10, 1592 (Lasocki and Prior 106, 102). The Lanyers were from Rouen and had come to England under Elizabeth (Rowse 14). Alphonso was a member of the recorder consort originally started by the five Bassano brothers that included Lanyer's father, Baptista. (Indeed, Alphonso was the recipient of the royal stipend that had once been Baptista's [Lasocki and Prior 147].) Alphonso served as gentleman volunteer in the Essex Islands Voyage of 1597 and had also done service in Ireland (Lewalski, "God" 205; Rowse 11; Woods 213). He was one of fifty-nine musicians who played at Elizabeth's funeral, and he moved at her death into the service of James I (Rowse 18). He had been preferred by Elizabeth's closest advisor, William Cecil, Lord Burghley, and granted a monopoly for the weighing of hay and straw in London (six pence for every load of hay and three pence for every load of straw brought into London and Westminster) (Rowse 19; Lasocki and Prior 108-09). When he died in 1613, Aemilia Lanyer made over the grant to her brother-in-law, Innocent, evidently with an understanding that she would continue to receive a portion of it, though her right to that income was a source of later dispute.

Lanyer told Forman that she had suffered many miscarriages (Rowse 11), but she had at least two children: the first (presumably the son of Hunsdon) named Henry, born early in 1593, and a daughter, Odillya, born in December of 1598, who died at ten months of age and was buried at St. Botolph's, Bishopsgate (Rowse 11, 15; Woods 213). Henry became one of the king's flautists on September 29, 1629. He had two children by his wife, Joyce Mansfield, whom he married in 1623: Mary, baptized July 25, 1627, and Henry, baptized January 16, 1630. The children may have been orphaned on Henry's death in October 1633. At any rate, Lanyer says in 1635 that she has "two grandchildren to provide for" (Rowse 35).

Lanyer first consulted Simon Forman, the astrologer, on May 17, 1597 (Rowse 11). She was then living in Longditch, Westminster, next to Canon Row, which Rowse calls "a fashionable quarter full of the houses of grandees" (13-14). Forman provides the only physical description we have of Lanyer--that she had a wart or mole in the pit of her throat (Rowse 12). Lanyer consulted Forman again on June 3 and 16, asking whether her husband would come into any preferment (Rowse 11). Forman reported that she was unhappy with her husband who had "dealt hardly with her" and "spent and consumed her goods" (Rowse 12). Forman thought her (supposed) emotional and financial neediness would make her "a good fellow," that is, a willing sex partner, but, though she seems to have had continued contact with Forman over the next few years and may have engaged in sexual play with him, she refused to have intercourse, prompting him to wonder "whether or not she is an incuba" and to call her a whore (Rowse 12, 13).

Lanyer published her volume of poetry, Salve Deus Rex Judaeorum (Hail, God, King of the Jews), in 1611, when she was forty-two years old. All the poems are in iambic pentameter, though the verse forms vary. Two prefatory pieces and an afterword are prose. "The Description of Cooke-ham" must have been written between February 25, 1609 (when Anne Clifford married and took the name "Dorset," by which she is called in the poem), and October 2, 1610 (when the poem was entered in the Stationers' Register) (Lewalski, "Lady" 275 n. 28), but there is no internal evidence to date other portions of the book so precisely and nothing to suggest that all of the poems were written at the same time. The book was issued twice, though the contents of extant copies make reconstruction of its publication history complicated. STC 15277 includes prefatory addresses to 1) Queen Anne, 2) the Princess Elizabeth, 3) "all vertuous Ladies in generall," 4) Lucy, Countess of Bedford, 5) Anne, Countess of Dorset (seven stanzas), and 6) Margaret, Countess of Cumberland. That version has a typesetting error in the second and third stanzas of D4 verso which is corrected in STC 15227.5, suggesting that version is the second printing. However, both STC versions have a five-line publisher's imprint on the title page, though a four-line imprint marks the first printing. This discrepancy suggests that later collectors cannibalized damaged copies to make "complete" versions (which, indeed, is the case with the Alexander Dyce copy held by the Huntington Library). STC 15277.5 has prefatory addresses to 1) Queen Anne, 2) the Princess Elizabeth, 3) "all vertuous Ladies in generall," 4) Arabella Stuart, 5) Susan, Countess of Kent, 6) Mary Sidney, Countess of Pembroke, 7) Ludy, Countess of Bedford, 8) Margaret, Countess of Cumberland, 9) Katherine, Countess of Suffolk, 10) Anne, Countess of Dorset (eighteen stanzas), and 11) "the vertuous reader." Lewalski argues that "most of the dedicatees were linked through kinship or marriage with the staunchly Protestant faction of Robert Dudley" ("God" 207). Nine copies of the book survive, including a presentation copy from Prince Henry's library (Greer et al. 45; Woods 214). There are no extant contemporary references to Lanyer's book.

Lanyer's book is radical in its theology and politics and could aptly be called proto-feminist. Both the prefatory poems and the title poem argue for women's religious and social equality, and the longer version of the poem addressed to Anne Clifford (to whom the book is actually dedicated) includes a levelling tirade against class privilege. In addition to the prefatory poems, Lanyer's book consists of the long (1840-line) title poem, "Salve Deus Rex Judaeorum," "The Description of Cooke-ham," and a final prose address "To the doubtfull Reader" wherein Lanyer says that she dreamed of the book's title long before she wrote the book, implying its divine commissioning. "Salve Deus Rex Judaeorum" is a meditation on the Passion which argues that men (not women) were responsible for the crucifixion of Christ. Lanyer further argues in an extended section entitled "Eves Apologie in Defense of Women" that Eve was less culpable than Adam. Lanyer then compares women's sinfulness in the Edenic context to men's sinfulness in the context of the crucifixion to argue for women's social and religious equality with men. "The Description of Cooke-ham" is the first country house poem to be published in English (predating Ben Jonson's "To Penshurst" [1616]). Drawing on classical generic features, Lanyer figures the virtue of the "Lady" of the poem, Margaret, Countess of Cumberland, in the homage accorded her by the estate's flora and fauna.

After her husband's death, Lanyer supported herself, at least in part, by running a school, as she put it, for "children of divers persons of worth and understanding." She leased a house for that purpose from Edward Smith, an attorney, in St. Giles in the Fields (an aristocratic London suburb) in the summer of 1617. Lanyer and Smith were almost immediately engaged in a series of lawsuits and countersuits. Lanyer claimed her right to deduct from the rent ten pounds she had spent on repairs; Smith sued her for nonpayment and had her arrested, a scene not apt to inspire confidence among the parents of one's students. She seems to have lost most of her pupils but stayed on in the house through August 1619 when she left without paying her midsummer rent, whereupon she was arrested again (Rowse 33-35; Lasocki and Prior 104).

Lanyer appears again in the law courts in 1635 (at age sixty-six), two years after the death of her son, Henry. She was supposed to receive half the profits from the hay and straw weighing patent she had made over to her late husband's brother, Innocent, but had received only eight pounds. She describes herself as being "in great misery and having two grandchildren to provide for." Her suit was complicated by the fact that, in the intervening years since her husband's death, Innocent had made over the patent to another brother, Clement. Charles I ordered Clement to pay Lanyer twenty pounds a year, but Lanyer had to bring suit again the next year, as Clement had paid her only four pounds. Their legal wrangling continued through 1638 with Clement repeatedly ordered to pay her and repeatedly complaining that he has not been able to collect on the patent (Rowse 35-37; Lasocki and Prior 104-105). Whether Lanyer was ever able to obtain the full amount awarded to her is unclear, but she died, at age seventy-six, a "pensioner," that is, possessed of a regular income, and was buried on April 3, 1645, at Clerkenwell (Rowse 37; Lasocki and Prior 106).

Generation No. 3

3. John³ Lanier (Nicholas², John¹) was born 1565, and died Unknown. He married Frances Galliardello. She died Unknown.

Children of John Lanier and Frances Galliardello are:

- 13 i. Mark Anthony⁴ Lanier, born August 26, 1587; died August 26, 1587.
14 ii. Nicholas Lanier, born September 1588; died 1666. He married Elizabeth; died Unknown.

Notes for Nicholas Lanier:
baptized on September 10, 1588. He was a musician of great talent and was very versatile, being a flutist, composer, painter, etcher, and a connoisseur of art.

On July 11, 1626, he was appointed by King Charles I as "Master of the King's Music", with a pension of 200 pounds a year. He composed the music for many of Ben Johnson's Masques, the best known being "Lovers Made Men" for which he not only painted the scenery, but also sang in it. This was given at Lord Hayes house on February 22, 1617. Pepys said of Nicholas, "His music puts me in an ecstasy".

In addition, in 1625, Nicholas Lanier was sent abroad by the King to purchase paintings, statues, and fine works of art. The State Papers of that time record many passes given to him to travel between England, Flanders, and Italy. After the outbreak of the English Civil War in 1642, he had the mortification of seeing the King's wonderful collection of art which he had done so much to form, dispersed by auction. Many of the paintings were bought by various Laniers who had been in the Royal Service. Nicholas Lanier purchased four paintings at 250 pounds, one being his own portrait by Van Dyck. His uncles, Jerome and Clement Lanier, were also purchasers.

During the Civil War, the fortunes of the Laniers, and others loyal to the Crown, declined. They lost their appointments (and King Charles I lost his head), suffered privation, even starvation, and often imprisonment. From "Annals of English Court Music" by Willibald Nagel, 1863, page 46, he states, "In 1655, about 50 of those formerly in the service of King Charles prepared a petition, after they had tried all other means in vain, to get bread for themselves and their families, hoping to arouse pity for their plight. They only decided to take this last step after a number of their kin died of starvation." And from the same book and page we read, "Thomas Lanier (son of Andrea, and grandson of Nicholas Sr.) petitioned King Charles II to be restored to his third post which had been guaranteed him, and also his father, who had been jailed in 1643; they had given their all in the King's cause."

Nicholas Lanier, Master of the King's Music, followed the Stuarts into exile on the continent, where his wife joined him in June 1651, having received a pass from the Government for herself and two servants. When Charles II came to the throne in 1660, he restored Nicholas Lanier to his former high position. In 1636 King Charles I had incorporated the musicians under a charter as "Cominalty of Arts and Science of Musicke" in Westminster. King Charles II renewed the charter, and Nicholas Lanier was again the First Marshall.

Nicholas Lanier died February 1665/6. The Parish register of St. Alphege, East Greenwich, records his burial as 24th February, Mr. Nicholas Lanier buried away" (i.e. elsewhere). His will names wife Elizabeth, brother John Lanier's son (later Sir John), and his sister; Sister Dunne and her son and three daughters, and a niece Elizabeth Atkins and her brother and sister.

The large portrait of Nicholas Lanier painted by Van Dyck in Genoa, Italy, in 1632 while Lanier was on one of his trips abroad, was responsible for the King urging Van Dyck to go to London. This portrait was among the Art Treasures from the Vienna Collections which toured the United States after World War II. It hangs permanently in the Kunsthistorisches Museum in Vienna. The charcoal sketch of this hangs in the National Gallery of Scotland in Edinburgh. Another portrait of him, painted about 1625 by Jan Liven, was finely engraved by Lucas Voersterman; and his own self portrait hangs in the Examination School at Oxford, England.

7. Clement³ Lanier (Nicholas², John¹) was born 1580 in London, England, and died November 06, 1661 in St Alfege's East Greenwich, Kent, England. He married Hannah Rebecca Collett March 16, 1626/27 in St Margaret's, Lee in Kent, England, daughter of John Collett and Susanne Ferrar. She was born 1608 in St Margaret's, in Lee, Kent, England, and died December 22, 1653.

Notes for Clement Lanier:

Clement was a Musician and Gentleman of the Kings Chambers for both James I and Charles I. He purchased some of the great art collection (assembled for Charles I, by his cousin, Nicholas, son of John and Frances Lanier) when Oliver Cromwell was in power. When Charles I was executed, the Laniers suffered financial setbacks and hardship while supporting the Prince of Wales (later Charles II) and his struggles to gain the Throne. They regained some of their fortunes after the Restoration. Clement's will was proved 12/3/1661 and registered 5/20/1662.

CLEMENT LANIER, fifth son of Nicholas and Lucrece Lanier, was a musician on the recorder, which was a type of flute. He was also a Gentleman of the King's Chamber. In March 1628 at St. Margarets, Lee, he married Hannah Collet. They had 11 children, some whose baptisms were registered in a very old book of Greenwich and Lewisham. After 1637 other children's baptisms were recorded in the Parish of St. Alphege, and three baptism dates are missing, those of John, Elizabeth and Charles.

It is from Clement Lanier and Hannah his wife that the Laniers of Virginia, and the Barbados descend. In his will of February 1658/9, Clement leaves to his oldest daughter, Hannah, his house and 40 pounds. Money was left outright to Nicholas, Lionel, William and Frances, and also to Elizabeth and Susanna when they became of age or married. The will of Clement names Susanna and Elizabeth as not being of age in 1658, which would make them born after 1638; however, the baptism of Susanna is given as June 10, 1633. Children Lucretia and Charles were dead. But to John and Robert, who had already left home, he left money "when they shall come to demand the same of my Executrix".

Hannah's burial was recorded at St. Alphege as December 22, 1653. Clement Lanier was buried November 6, 1661, both in East Greenwich. His will, proved December 3, 1661 was registered 20 May 1662. "Lanier" by Louise Ingersoll.

Notes for John L Lanier:

John Lanier along with his son John II, served as members of Bacon's Rebellion to protest Governor Berkley's lack of protection from the Powhatan Indian attacks. John along with John Woodlief plead with Gov Berkeley and were refused. The rebels were then led to Nathaniel Bacon to defeat the Pamunky Indian tribe and lay seige on Jamestown in defiance to Berkeley's lack of support. The rebellion was crushed by forces sent from Charles II. John Sr's fate during this rebellion is unknown.

He married (3) Ann Wilkinson April 28, 1783 in Brunswick Co, VA. She died Unknown.

Notes for Benjamin B Lanier:

Benjamin moved to Brunswick Co., VA soon after his marriage to Elizabeth and bought many acres of land, which later became Lunenburg Co, in 1762, this county became the new county of Mecklenburg. During the American Revolution, Benjamin Lanier and his son Robert were among the many who signed the Oath of Allegiance. Benjamin gave money and supplies to aid the Revolution, and his descendents are eligible for membership in the DAR.

His will was dated Sept 14, 179 and signed by himself, Benjamin B Lanier, no doubt to distinguish himself from Benjamin, son of Thomas Lanier living in Sussex Co and a young Benjamin, son of Lemuel Lanier living in Henry Co. The will was probated in Mecklenburg Co, Dec 12 1796.

Notes for Sidney Lanier:

"...from war torn and reconstruction harried Georgia, came Sidney Lanier, an ex-Confederate soldier, who struggled for twenty years against poverty and disease to establish a place for himself in the arts of music and poetry, dut died in 1881, at the age of thirty-nine, with his work half finished. He wrote narratives for boys, lectured on the novel and on Shakespeare at Johns Hopkins University, played the flute marvelously in the Peabody Symphony Orchestra, and composed poems when he could. Lanier's idealism was genuine and passionately maintained, but the world he imagined was rather a reconstruction of an idealized past than a creation for the future. Instead of being naive, realistic and democratic, it was pious, sentimental and aristocratic. His idea man was more like Tennyson's Sir Galahad than Whitman's caresser of life. He was painfully aware of Darwin and the Machine Age, but he longed for a science that would leave his religious faith unimpaired, and for an industrial order that would live by the code of Christian kinghthood. Like Emerson and Whitman he wished to reconcile food and evil, rfee will and fate, and all the other dichotomies of human experience, but he wanted to do it by converting evil to good and fate to free will. As a matter of fact, it is doubtful whether Lanier seriously believed in the possibility of resolving these age-old antagonisms, but made a dream into which he escaped from the problem. Music offered him a perfect escape from these conflicts because it lifted him out of the world of diverse things into the world of harmonious beauty....."
AMERICAN IDEALISM by Floyd Stovall, Pub Norman University Of Oklahoma Press, 1948
